

The Engineer

The Fireman

I've Been Workin' On The Railroad...

For more than a century, engineers, firemen and conductors were among the legendary people who made America's railroads strong. Today, although steam locomotives are no longer being used, many of the same jobs are still being performed. With the addition of computers to do daily operations, railroads are working harder than ever to be more efficient and to improve the quality of their services.
